

Civic Literacy Statistics

If a person votes in the first election after they turn 18, they will probably be a lifelong voter.

---

Learning about civics increases interest in voting in future elections.

---

A third of Canadian adults don't recall learning anything about civics in school.

---

Canadians who did not learn civic engagement skills in school are much less likely to enjoy discussing social issues with their friends and family.

---

More civically literate citizens are less likely to be influenced by negative and divisive campaigning.
